

Qualitative RPE Face Fit Test

Approximately 12,000 people die and 400,000 working days are lost every year through occupational respiratory diseases in the UK. It is estimated that 50% of RPE does not fit the user.

Overview

Where respiratory protective equipment (RPE) is used as a control measure under Health and Safety legislation it is vital that the selected RPE is adequate and suitable. This is as per the PPE Regulations 2002 and HSG53 – RPE at Work which specifies the need for face fit testing and OC282/28 How to Face Fit.

This legislative requirement is often overlooked by employers, which could lead to either chronic or acute ill health of their employees.

Anyone wearing a close fitted face piece (dust mask, respirator etc.) should undertake this test, including those wearing disposable RPE.

This type of test is suitable for infrequent use or lower risk applications and only half mask respirators (disposable and reusable) with a particulate filter.

Test Aims

The performance of tight-fitting face pieces depends on achieving a good contact between the wearer's skin and the face seal of the face piece. Peoples' faces vary significantly in shape and size so it is unlikely that one particular type, or size of RPE face piece, will fit everyone. Inadequate fit will significantly reduce the protection provided to the wearer.

Test Outline

- Based on the taste test method using either Bitrex or Saccharin solutions
- Delegate is required to undertake a series of basic exercises to demonstrate suitable fit between the user and the mask
- The purpose of the test is to demonstrate if the mask does or does not fit the user therefore subsequent re-tests may be chargeable
